

Welcome to the 1st Minclusion project conference

How can mobile technology support integration of newly arrived migrants?

12 June, 2017, Lindholmen, Gothenburg, Sweden

For newly arrived migrants, learning the language and about the culture is a vital element to quickly integrate into the new society. The Minclusion project aims at developing a mobile application for language learning and intercultural communication to help Arabic speaking migrants to integrate in Sweden.

The project is a collaboration between researchers at Chalmers University of Technology and University of Gothenburg. Minclusion is funded by Asylum, Migration and Integration Fund (AMIF)

Keynote speaker

Agnes Kukulska Hulme, Professor of Learning Technology and Communication, Open University, UK

Agnes is currently leading research projects investigating learning innovation in the UK and internationally. She has led numerous projects investigating innovative and emergent practice with learning technologies in post-16 education. Agnes has recently been part of the European MOTILL project on mobile technologies in lifelong learning and the MASELTOV project on smart and personalized technologies for social inclusion of immigrants and the British Council project on Mobile Pedagogy for English Language Teaching. She has a long standing research interest in effective communication with technology and the experiences of non-technical users.
